This course is a survey of modern political philosophy beginning with Machiavelli, running through the social contract tradition as elaborated by Hobbes, Locke, and Rousseau, and concluding with the idealist and progressive philosophy of Kant. Among the topics we will be considering are: the overthrow of the classical horizon, the movement of human will or freedom to the center of political thought, the foundations of liberalism, the origin and meaning of rights, the relationship between freedom and equality, the role of democracy, the rise of history, and the belief in human progress.
