Full descriptions available on the Family Weekend Mobile App or at bowdoin.edu/familyweekend.

“Contradictions of Commodification: Market, Care, and Male Circumcision in Turkey”
Oyman Basaran, Assistant Professor of Sociology
A growing concern about care seizes the public. Welfare institutions expected to provide care for the elderly, the sick, and the infirm have been failing us for decades now. The once-solid trust in market for allocating resources of care efficiently and equitably has recently dwindled. And inequalities in access to good care have grown alarmingly. This talk explores the relationship between “care” and “market” by examining how care is organized in male circumcision in Turkey. Should care be commodified? Or should it be organized as a gift? Is good care only a matter of choice? Can caregivers sustain their ethical commitments when they perform caring activities under market pressure? Lancaster Lounge, Moulton Union.

“AI and You: The Truth behind the Fiction about How Artificial Intelligence Is Changing Our Lives”
Eric Chown, Professor of Digital and Computational Studies
Even as artificial intelligence (AI) is becoming increasingly important in our lives, popular media often distorts what AI is and what it is capable of. Eric Chown, professor of digital and computational studies at Bowdoin College and former head of Bowdoin’s world championship RoboCup team, will look at the reality behind the headlines and stories, and what we might expect next from the world of AI. Topics will range from “deep fakes” to robotics. Room 315, Searles Hall.

“The Race for Wealth: Speculation, Competition and Morality in Nineteenth-Century Art”
Pamela Fletcher, Professor of Art History
Speculative bubbles, dramatic reversals of fortune, and illegal stock trading—the dangers of modern financial markets were the subject of deep concern in nineteenth-century London, the international capital of finance in the period. This talk explores how artists and authors grappled with these issues in paintings and novels, asking their viewers fundamental questions about modern morality: Is wealth the definition of success and the source of meaning in life, or are moral qualities and family life more valuable? Is life a progress—with the overtones of moral improvement and development that term carried, or a race, in which only some can be winners? Are we responsible for our own moral choices, or do we face an opaque system, one that may be rigged against us? Beam Classroom, Visual Arts Center.
